

UPDATE: Status of the Indoor Mask Mandate

January 30, 2022

The indoor mask-wearing requirement continues to be in effect until further notice.

On Friday morning, a New York State appellate court began the appeals process for the legal matter that challenged the indoor mask mandate. It is not known how long it will take for the court to issue a decision - estimates range from a few days to weeks. The stay order issued on Tuesday means that for now, the mask mandate for schools stands. The current executive order is in place through February 21. Governor Hochul has stated that she will make a decision as to whether or not to extend the executive order before the end of January (tomorrow!).

As more information becomes available, the school community will be updated.
